

President Bush, teach our children the value of keeping your word.

Rocky Mountain National Park is the perfect place to teach America's children about values and character. It's surrounded by the National Forest you once pledged to protect and are now thinking of destroying.

On Earth Day, you said, "Our prosperity as a nation will mean little, if our legacy to future generations is a world of polluted air, toxic waste, and vanished forests." Today, you are considering gutting the Roadless Area Conservation Rule to open nearly one quarter of the surrounding Arapaho Roosevelt National Forest to logging, mining, and drilling—significantly damaging our national park.

Yes, Rocky Mountain National Park is a picture perfect place—provided you act to keep it that way. Teach young Americans about real character. Show them how a person should stand up to friends and special interests when they're wrong. Do what's right for everyone.
